

If all of the FCC licenses forbid political favoritism and/or demand equal free time for "documentaries", then Sinclair is wrong on this issue and his licenses, given free to him based upon his awareness of these restrictions, should be revoked. If, despite this his knowledge of this possibility, he continues to stay this course and thereby violates the federal law regarding campaign finance he should be fined the maximum amount possible because of the flagrant nature of the violation. In addition to the fine he should have all the licenses revoked. The very nature of a public radio license is to inform the public not to reform the public.
